Strong FOUNDATIONS

HOW WE DID IT:

The bulk of the information in the Remodeling 550 comes from the companies based on their responses to an online survey. Additional information comes via email, phone calls, and public sources. Diane Kittower managed the project; Dante Webster provided additional research. Craig Webb and Curtis Sprung cleaned up and analyzed the numbers.

This year's Remodeling 550 finds the nation's largest remodeling firms are bigger and healthier than ever, beneficiaries of the nation's busiest time for repair and rehab work. Here's who leads the pack in 2016.

As they say in New Orleans, Laissez les bon temps roulez—let the good times roll—for this year's members of the Remodeling 550. Annual revenue growth averaged 7% to 9% for the leading companies that were on this latest list as well as 2015's report. And anecdotal reports suggest the numbers could have been even higher if remodelers could only have found additional help to meet customer demand.

We've presented the Remodeling 550 annually since 2009, listing the industry's top full-service remodelers, replacement contractors, insurance restoration firms, and franchise operations. You'll find the complete lists on our website at remodeling.hw.net/550, set up in a way makes sorting and filtering the data simple and intuitive.

Meanwhile, for this print report, we've reduced the amount of individual data slightly so that we could provide a more detailed analysis of the overall numbers and what trends they reveal about the industry as a whole. We also have mini-profiles of eight outstanding companies on the full-service and replacement lists, recognized for superior total revenue, year-over-year growth, tenure in the business, volume of jobs performed, or the high average value of each project. Through these peeks into the best practices of some of the most successful companies in the home improvement industry, we hope to provide tips on general operational excellence.

As in past years, you'll see a special designation for Remodeling 550 members who also have been selected for the Big50, our annual recognition of top-drawer dealers. And again this year, we've teamed up with GuildQuality to point out firms that won its quality award.
